FIRE.-The alarm of fire, about 8 o'clock last evening, proceeded from the produce store of George C. Hunter, on Main street, betwice Third and Fourth streets. The fire originated under the steirs among a lot of sacks, and if it had not been discovered at the time it was the entire building would have been destroyed. The safe was open and the books scattered around, and it is presumed that the store was first robbed and then set on fire. The windows in the rear of the building were open, and the incendiaries no doubt effected their entrance by this means. The loss by fire and water will not exceed $6,000, which is no doubt fully covered by insurance,

NEW ORLEANS, April 4 On the 21 Gen. Steele's column, from Pensacola, effected a junction with the right of our line before Spaulsh Fort. This will make our force three times a great as that of the rebels. This junction was among the last of the preparations for an assault on the fort, and it is believed here, by those having good facilities for knowing, that the main attack is in progress to-day, if not already completed. Gen. Totten has been moving up his siege trair, and has upword of fifty pieces of heavy artillery bearing on Spinish Fort, ready to be unmasked when the attack is made. A few nights ago twenty-five men, from a Vermont regiment, in a charge, got upon the enemy's breastworks, and were captured. Ou our lest a company of rebels were captured in

During the late years the public have been misled by ge bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of rands upon the sick, for they not only contain ilitle, if auy, Farsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Ifonce, hitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extrac's of Sareaparilla which Shaving, Hair Brossing & Bathing Saloon, flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla." and intend to supply ich a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of bloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresisting by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best

The New York Times, in a kindir-meant, but, we trust, needless defense of Mr. Greeley's "Peace Letter," says:
"We are inclined to believe that Mr. Greeley himself is quite satisfied by this time with the turn which the Niagara peace negotiations tock. That whole sfriir proves to have been, in the main, a tilek. There was no expectation and no purpose of peace on the part of the rebels. Their game was to make capital for the approaching Presidential election. They believed they could aid materially in electing a Democratic President, and that then they could negotiate for peace with better prospects of having somathing to show as the fruits of their rebellion. Furnishing Goods,

As die the embers on the hearth,
And o'er the floor the shadows fall,
And veeps the chirping cricket forth,
And ticks the death watch in the wall—
I see a form on yonder chair
That grows beneath the waning light—
There are the wan, sad features—there,
The pallid brow and locks of white!
My Father! when they laid thee down,
And heaped the clay upon thy breast,
And left thee sleeping all alone
Uponthy narrow couch of rest,
I know not why I could not weep—
The soothing drops retused to roll;
And of the that grief is wild and deep
Which settles tearless on the soul!
But whem I saw thy vacant chair—
Thine idle hat upon the wall—
Thy book—the penciled passage where
Thine eyes had rested, last of all;
The tree beneath whose friendly shade
Thy trembling feet had wandered forth—
The very prints those feet had made
When last they feeb y trod the earth—
And thought, while countless ages fied,
Thy vacant seat would vacant stand—
Unworn thy hat, thy book unread,
Effaced thy footsteps from the sand—
And widowed, in this cheerless world,
The heart that gave its love to thee—
Torn, like a vine, whose tendefile curled
More closely round the falling tree!
Oh, Father: then, for her and thee!
Gushed madly ferth the scorching tears;
And oft, and long, and bitterly,
Those tears have gushed in later years;

And oft, and long, and bitterly,
Those tears have gushed in later years;
For, as the world growe cold around,
And things take on their real bue,
'Tis ead to learn that love is found
Alone above the stars with you. THE CLYNTON PINE.

BY MIRIAM ALLEN,

The old schoolmaster took a spelling book from his desk, pushed up his spectaeles, and in a loud voice called, "Mark Thurston, Number one!" A boy, with very flashing black eyes.

walked proudly down the aisle, and took his place at the head of the class. Rosa McGilverie, Number two," called the loud voice again. There was a little confusion on the girls' side, and then a snarl of bright curls ap-

"Take your place!" thundered the school-

"Just as the ABC class does; poor little fellow! So he should have another trial!" drawled Rosa. "You are a hateful girl," cried Mark, with angry cycs; "you are horrid homely and dreadful mean, and nobody likes you." Rosa could not bear this. She sprang to her feet and tried to strike the boy's hand-some face. He was too tall by far for her to reach. She seized her slate then, flung it with all her strength against him, and ran away. Mark turned white with rage, but he was too chivalrous to return the blow. He rushed home in a passion, burst open the kitchen door, and cried, "O, mother,

I wish Rosa McGilverie was a boy, so I could give her a good thrashing."

The angry children little thought how many years would pass before they would meet under the old pine again. That night Rosa was sent to live in another town near Better days dawned for the orphhan girl. Her new found aunt, with whom she was to live, was a gentle Christian woman. She, of all others, was the one to tame the ungovernable child, and develop her love-

When Rosa next saw Clyton, she was a young lady of eighteen. Her grandmother, who lived in the old village, was ill and sent for her. With careful nursing the old lady recovered, and Rosa determined to return to her good aunt's. How differently she felt about leaving Clynton this time. Be-fore, she was like the "Miller of Mansfield." Now she was so lovely and gentle that she was a universal favorite. She was beset with invitations from the villagers. "This is my last day in Clynton," said she, one morning; "where shall I go this afternoon? Here's an invitation to a picnic on the each, and there's the ride to Cherry Valley, and here's dear Mrs. Thurston's little note, asking me to take tea with her. I'll go there. I fear she has never quite for givgo there. I rear she has never quite for given me for treating Mark so shamefully, when I was little. Now that he has been at see so long, his mother adores him more than ever. I must try to have her think better of me."

Rosa had the consolation of knowing that Mrs. Thurston did think better of her. That evening as they sat in the garden sum-mer-house, the old lady said, kindly, "My dear Bosa, do you know how you are changed? You used to be the torment of the whole village. Don't look so sorrow-ful, dear. You know that you are a comfort to every one that knows you now. I wonder what Mark would say if he could see this little girl that struck him once." There was a rustle among the honey-suckle vines that chaded the summer-house, but why should Mrs. Thurston and Rosa suspect anything but humming-birds? They did not know that the "Clanmarina" had arrived in New York. Mark himself was standing without, looking with wondering eyes at the young lady beside his mother. "Can she be Rosa McGilverie?" he thought. "That snarl of hair changed to levely curls, these wicked eyes, so sweet and dark, that ugly child transformed to a beauty?" I can't begin to tell you of all that was said and done when Mark raised the vines and exclaimed, in his old merry voice, "Good evening, ladies." Neither do I know just how Rosa asked forgiveness of the young Captain, as they walked that night down the hill, past the old pine, to her grandmother's cottage. I imagine Mark No. 408 Main street, over R. J. Cravford'a Coal Oil and

A Woman Shoots Her Betrayer. In the adjoining county of LeSeur there recently came to light a case of seduction and adultery, the circumstances of which makes the blood hot, and causes every honorable man to hate and loath the object in human form that thus violates the chastity of the wife of one of our soldiers, who has since the sad transaction given his life a sacrifice to his country on the bloody field of Nashville. The circumstances, as we have them, are as follows:

The woman was married some three years ago. About two years ago her husband en-listed in the 10th Minnesota regiment. During the summer just passed, the woman engaged in teaching school in a neighborhood of Kentuckians, who had left their own State to get rid of military service, and taken refuge in this State when the war first broke out. She is rather a good look. ing young woman, and the renegades, it seems, upon first acquaintance, set about to compass her ruin. This man had a wife in the South, and was living with his sister, where this woman boarded. By the assist-ance of his sister and brother-in-law, the woman was brought into his company very frequently.

On one occasion, about three months ago, she was by accident or purposely left alone with him at his sister's place. He took advantage of this, and, partly by earnest persuasion, accomplished his hellish purpose. She at once left the place. For fear of scandal she kept the transaction a secret in her own heart. Her parents noticed that something was working on her feel-ings, but supposed it had reference to her absent husband. In December following, the sad news of lives lost at the battle of Nashville reached her. She found on the list of killed her own husband's name. She then gave vent to her long pent up feelings in sealding tears. She wept bitterly every day, and grew thin and pale. One day not long since she was absent. Her mother, upon going into her daughter's room, dis-covered a letter directed to herself. She opened il, and there read the cause of her daughter's sorrow. The letter stated what master. The little girl then came leisurely daughter's sorrow. The letter stated what from her seat, walked to the other part of had transpired; that she was enciente; that he room, and stood next Mark.

"Look here," she whispered, nudging him with her sharp little clbow, "I'm going made up her mind to leave them forever.

After learning her own condition, the made with the man who ruined her, to take her out of the country, entirely beleave her to herself and her own resources.

Her mother, who found the letter on the same day that the parties left, informed the lenge, for Mr. Jones was looking that way, but she glanced at number one with such a He overtook them before they had got far, sneer, that the schoolmaster said, "Mark, and pretended that he had a warrant for the man's arrest. The fellow at once proposed to give $100, and leave the country never to return, if the father would let him off. The old man took the $100 and

In a few days the fellow returned to the neighborhood and boasted of his crime, taking pains to defame and slander the character of the victim. The woman is nearly insane and fears are entertained that she may commit suicide a fellow-being, is only fit to be damned, and hardly fit for that.

Since the above was in type, we learn that the young woman—whose husband's hen she entered with her whole heart into the spelling. She was a bright scholar- Rev. Mr. Crandall, who is well known in this county—has shot her seducer, whose name is Stanley. The Sheriff of LeSeur county passed through this place on Tuesday night last in search of her. He stated Mark spelled with a clear, assured voice, as if to impress Rosa with the impossibility of his failure. But alas for human pride! went to St. Peter, and the shooting must not mortally wounded, and that the woman

We learn that Stanley is a rebel deserter from Virginia instead of from Kentucky. We did not see the Sheriff ourselves which will account for our not obtaining Up to the time of going to prese, the Sheriff has not returned to this place on his way home, as was expected .- [Wilton (Minnesota) News.
